

Abstract

A method for managing data from multiple data sources uses conduits to enable one user interface to manage data from multiple data sources, by allowing multiple data sources and/or different versions of a data source to be viewed and managed through a single instance of a user interface. As a result, menus, toolbars and navigational aids may operate across all the data. In addition, the conduits may shield the user interface from the update performance of each data source individually.

09981893 101901
T06T0T E88660